CONCLUSIONS
The Qualitative Leap of Democracy

United by our wish to achieve a true democracy, we must create an alliance between the political, economic and citizens sectors. Only this will provide the level of viability and essential consensus that is necessary to effectively address the challenge that is at stake in this game of coexistence. The balance between moral authority and technical competence is fundamental for this.

Democratic institutions and agents are not untouchable, nor unquestionable and they must respond to reality and the needs of the societies which they serve and form a part of. They should review its constitution and its actualization based on sensitivity to the common good, accountability, competency and transparency. This has to be established and governed by the rules of democracy for all its purposes.

To think about democracy in a peaceful way is to talk of the quality of coexistence and development. Development must enable the conditions of equality for citizens and the recognition of essential dignity to implement a policy framework. It must rely on the minimum of justice and enable the realization of the life project of every person and every human group whilst respecting pluralism and dissent.